Synopsis : Fathers 4 Justice has made known some of the failings of family law. This book takes the next step, by exposing the entire degenerate system. In a novel way, you learn what is going on, how this came about, and who has been responsible. The book explores ethics and remedies. It has been said that there would be history books written, in the future, about this theme. This is the first such book. If you have had a negative experience of the UK's family law regime, or want to understand why Father 4 Justice (F4J) exists, or are concerned for the family and men's rights, this is essential reading.

A unique combination of documentary account and sketch autobiography. It has a well-researched analysis of family law, the results of the most important survey ever carried out in the UK, and all this blended with a dramatic personal case.

But more than simply a book : further online supportive reading is provided, and this is directly online from the ebook editions.

From the foreword by Dr John Campion : "Barry's account is unique ... a very sound historical account of family law reform ... and blends this with events in his own life - the normal events of a young man."

The author : Barry Worrall was born in 1947, educated at the universities of Newcastle upon Tyne and Southampton, initially in science, later in computer science. His career commenced as a software developer with computer manufacturers and users, then for 26 years as lecturer in computing at Northumbria University in Newcastle upon Tyne. He is now retired. Since 1990 he has been progressively involved in the father's and men's rights movement. In 1994 he attended the inaugural meeting of The Cheltenham Group, a men's rights organisation concerned for family law. He is currently the group's Director.
